The fashionable, rare satirical essayist, in a high and dignified manner, satirized the vanity and shallowness of modern society. He exposed the shallowness of the upper class and the absurdity of their pursuits, particularly their love of fashion and the anxious efforts to maintain their position in society. He criticized those who were only concerned with outward appearances and who never paid attention to the true value of things. He pointed out the ridiculousness of their customs and manners, and ridiculed their pretensions and vanities. He held up to public view the folly and absurdity of their pursuits, and exposed the vanity and shallowness of their behavior. He advised them to look at their own ways, and to see that there was nothing in the world that would be worth so much pains and trouble, as to be worth being so anxious about.

DEAR SIR,

In regard to the suit of clothes you had made for me, I have been informed by my tailor that there is a defect in the fit. As it is a matter of personal appearance, I am afraid it would be improper to return the clothes, but I understand that you will be pleased to exchange them for a suit that will answer my convenience.

Yours truly,

Dear Sir,

I have just received the suit of clothes you made for me, and I must say I am not satisfied with the result. The fit is not what I expected, and the style is not to my taste. I am afraid I shall have to return them.

Yours truly,

Dear Sir,

I am sending you a suit of clothes that I had made for me. I am afraid it is not to your liking, but I shall be pleased to exchange it for a suit that will meet with your approval.

Yours truly,

Attention is called to the communication in this issue from the pen of Mrs. A. J. Cooper, author of "Voices from the South," captioned "The Race's will not mix." It is a logical and scholarly dissertation on the much handled race problem, and we take pleasure in commending it to the notice of our readers.
